A Brasation Story.

Franciated from the German of Chamieso, by Thack

There lived a sage in days of yore, And he a handsome pigtall wore, And wendered much and sorrowed more Because it hung behind him.

He mused upon this curious case.
And swore he'd change the ser tail's place,
And have it henging as this face,
Not departing there behind him. Says he, "the mystery I've found— I'u surn me round"—he turned him round; But still it hur g behind him.

Then round and round, and out and in, All day the puzzled sage did spin In vatr: it mattered not a pin, The pigtail hung behird him.

And right and left, and round about, And up and down, and in and out, He turned: but still the pigtail stout Hung steadily behind him.

And though his efforts never slack, And though he twist, and twir, and tack, Alas! still faithful to his back The jigtall bangs behind him.

ST P. CLINTON BARRINGTON, Anthor of " The Lody Imogen," " Kate Wynard," "The Young Fisherman," "Fitz-Horn," "The Bel-Isabel," "Cenrado de Beltran," ste.

Mary Lizz's arose from ber repast much refreshed. The moon had just come up out of the vast expanse of waters, glancing brightly on their rough surface; but nothing was seen of any land. Gunnels grew impatient, if not a little alarmed. To interrupt the disagreeable thoughts which were beginning to crowd into his mind, he proceeded to give Mary Lizzie an account of his island home, which we shall con-

From time immemorial this island had been inhabited by cannibals, and acquired a terrible feputation among the superstitious sons of the cesan, who invariably gave it a wide berth in their cruisings. But many years before the time of which we write, Gunnels had led a large party of runaway convicts and other similar characters to the vicinity, made war on the cannibals, drove them to another island about a dozen miles west of this one, and thereafter retained possession. Here they had established themselves in safety, the reputation of the two islands tending to keep all well-disposed persons from these waters. Occasionally a whale ship or some small trader would reconnoitre the bleck and desolate island, but it was seldom that a boat's crew ventured ashore, either for water or provisions.

"Of this island," Gunnels informed Mary Liz zie, in conclusion, 'you will have the unlimited freedom, but you will do well not to attempt to escape. The savages we expelled are still living In great force on the island to the west of us, and they have the disagreeable habit of eating all of our people whom they chance to secure They have even made several attempts to route us out of our conquered territory, but have signally tailed. One reason of their hostility is found in the fact that I have abducted several of their fair young man-eaters for my men and myself, though they are such bold and resolute creatures, that they are more plague than profit. I'm blest if one of 'em didn't take to the water, and swim the whole distance back to tother island, a good dozen miles, and on one of the darkest nights you ever saw. But some of them are pretty, with their black eyes and acanty wardrobes, and I had the good fortune to secure the prettiest one of all, the day before leavng on this expedition-Pollywoggy, the daughter of o'd Paddy Molosso, the chief of the cannibals-both rejoicing in the proud names furnished them by some wag ish sailor. She is really charming in her way, and I'm quite im patient to see her !"

"Here she be," said a low voice of unusual eminine sweetness, and a light figure came bounding on the raft from a cance which had auddenly and roiselessly come alongside while Gunnels was speaking.

CHAPTER VIII.

A SAVAGE ENCHANTRESS IN DISPUTED POSSESSION.

An exclamation of gratitude left the lips of blary Lizzie, as she realized the presence of the young saveg on the raft, woman with woman. She remembered reading in the works of some traveller that the women of all nations and climes, however much they may be degraded and unsexed, still retain some of that gentleness and ministering sympathy which is the charm of the sex, and she at once conceived a hope of benefit from the new comer. At any rate it was pleasant to have a third person with her on the raft, and that one a female whose relations to Gunnels prompted the hope that she would not give him any countmance or assistance in his inquitous schemes.

But how soon were these wild hopes destroy-

For the young cavage had thrown her arm around Gunnells, with a manner of the most cord'al delight and endearment, kissing him again and again, her features alithe while covered by blushes and smiles, and her welcome so ardent and unrecerved, that an observer might have wondered how such strong affection could have se soon arisen between strangers in clime, language and blood. In fact, Gunnells himself seemed to be not a little astonihed at his warm reception, though evidently gatified, for he

"I was atraid, Pollywoggy, the you would meet me with tears and reproache for having stolen you from your home. But I'n glad you're sensible and good natured. How cheming you are, too, in the meenlight, in these light robes! a perfect child of nature," he added, is a sort of apologetic way to Mary Lizzie. "She has no artificial restraints !"

The dusty beauty smiled gaily and coquet. tishly, looking around. Her eyes fell mon Mary Lizzie, whom she scrutinized closely or an instant, and then vincicated with a disdain. fal look and a contemptuous toes of the head, as she said :

" Old woman !" Gunnels laughed. Mary Lizzie turned her thee away with a sigh, never more hopeless than now. She cou'd not very well understand the broken English of the savage maiden, but gathered that she had been impatiently expect-ing his seturn, and had often amused herself with coming around the island, in hopes to be the first to see him on his return.

"Here," said Pollyworky, finally, "Is much estee much drinkes!" and she produced a bas-ket from the bettem of the cance. "Old woman

"Stay !" interrupted Gunnels. "We'll go ard of the cames, and leave the craft to the fishes. "Come, Mary Lizzie!" The change was size made, and Pollywoggy seized the here and frommenced rowing, assuming that the island was in sight. Here companions then noticed that a dark line was grishle short the horison in the south, and soon arose come sharowy outlines against the sky, se of hills and villages. "Yee, there she is at last," said Gunnels "Checrup, Mary Lizzle, we shall soon be there. In the meantime, as I am dry as a fish, and hangry so a wo'r, I'll see in what Pollywoggy's 'much cates' consists. Ha! roast pig? Dell-cious! That's berbs of the earth and fowls of the air! By the way, Pollywoggy, was that your light we saw a little while ago?"

She replied in the affirmative, intimating tha ste had intended it as a guide for him, in case be was rear-which he thought quite considerate He commenced eating with the ragerness of man who has long been upon short allowance, while Pellywoggy regarded him with a sly and satisfied look, which deepened to a somewhat strister smile. The drink she had brought in bottle, was a rative production, whose name is unknown to ur; but with the qualities of which. Gunrels appeared to be admiringly familiar, to judge from the manner in which he patronized it again and again. After what might have been termed an inordinate repast, he bethought bimself of Mary Lizzle, who was almost questioning the mercy of a speedy death, and asked her if she would like a slight addition to the supper already enjoyed. Thinking of Jack, she bowed an affirmative to the question. "Then take basket and all," he said, passing it towards her, over the bead of Pollywoggy. "I ought to have remembered you before-"

Pollywoggy had raised her hand to take the basket, in order to pass it to its destination, when it slipped from her grasp and fell into the wa-

"Blast it!" said Gurnels. He saw that the weight of the bottle had car-tied the basket down. The eyes of Pollywoggy flashed with another satisfied look, as she incoherently murmured something, which Mary Lizzie supposed was her regrets at the occurrence.

The canoe was now off the entrance of the bay, and within half a mile of the shore, the outlines of the island becoming well defined to their view. But Gunne's seemed to think it strange that everything was so silent and quiet on the shore, and expressed the thought in a remark to the young savage, who assured him that his return was not looked for just now, and that all of his followers had been quite busy for a day or two-ard he smiled strangely-and were undoubtedly tired and sleepy just then. Silenced, if not satisfied, he fixed his eyes upon the dark outlines at the head of the bay, and awaited the moment of arrival there.

A woman is quick to perceive anything singular in any other woman, and the thought had already struck Mary L'azie that there was something feverish and overdone in all the affection Pollywoggy had pretended to lavish upon Gun-nels. But that personage in his self-complacent sanity, had seen nothing but the usual artfulness of her sex in the conduct of the young savage, and contentedly assured himself that she had made up her mind to make the most of an inevitable condition.

How great was his mistake! Just as Mary Lizzie's suspicion grew to a wild hope, the cance, having passed through the surf in safety, reached the beach at the head of the little bay. All around was still strangely silent, not a voice or a step breaking the monotony of the waves dashing against the shore. Not a sound came from the elevated plateau a hundred vards back from the water's edge, where the residences of Gunnels and his companions were situated, nor from the rude batteries on each side of the bay.

"Strange!" muttered Gunnels, as he stepped ashore. "The night so pleasant and the hour so early, too! Strange! I've twenty subjects on this island, some of whom ought to be on hand to welcome me home!" A dog came down the path, barking furiously at the party—a stranger dog—one Gunnels had never seen. This incident overthrew the lest vertige of the calmness he had tried to main-

"The lazy, care'ess dogs!" he declared. "If they don't watch better than this, the cannibals of the neighboring island, will be down one of these days, all of a sudden!"

The eyes of Pollywoggy sparkled with a secre intelligence, as she assisted Mary Lizzie ashore at the same time assuringly pressing her hand. "Hark!" said Gunnels. "I hear a voice. I eems they are not ail dead yet."

"To die or go to sleep, says Shakespeare, came in a gruff voice from a figure who had suddenly made himself visible upon the rocks above the landing.

"That's Jeddedish," said the young savage with brightenic g eyes.

"Yes, that whaling Yankee," added Gunnels and all listered.

"Demented Shakespeare," continued the voice "not to have seen the folly of connecting such a great thing as am death, with such a little thing as am sleep. Why, no feller, unless combunctiously tight, could approve of such a connectshun of ideas as death or sleep. Would Nero have sa'd to his prisoners: 'I give you death or sleep!' No, sir-ee! But if Shake had said, sleep or get drunk, he'd a hit my sentiments exact-

"Oh, give me a gal in the valley I love, A gal in the greenwood, a gal in the grove!

Tarnation! it's all gal, with my music tonight! But who could help it, after being seventeen days under the magic influence of sich a charming, black-eyed, short petticoated beauty as that Pollywoggy?" "Ah!" said Gunnels, smiling, as he and hi companions remained motionless in the shadow cast by the cliff, and where the dark background of the sea, caused them to remain unseen 'That fellow's getting resigned to his captivity. Listen!" 'If 'tadn't a bin for that 'ere beaut'yus Injin,' proceeded the lonely lover, "I'd a caved in afore ow. Where did she ever larn sich good Inglish? I guess some o' them white chokers must 've bin round here s-missionarying, or else she—bein' the darter of a chief-has enjoyed the 'vantages of a deestrick scule eddicashun!

"As I was a going 'cross London bridge, I met Miss Fidy foggy; And she was a form of life and light, Was my sweet Pollywoggy!

swow! it beats all creashun, what a nice foot ancle, and so forth, that gal's got! And such rosy, pouting lips! And them short clothes! Ob, dear! I wish I was a goose, and she, the biggest sort of an anagander, that she might swallow me at one mouthful. I wonder where ahe is now? I wonder what she's doing? I wonder if she loves me? I guess she's gone off rowin' sgin! I guess she's on the lookout for that blasted Funnels! I guess I've made an impression! Haw! if I only had some terback. er! Guess I'll see if the old glass, saved from he Betsy Baker, won't show me her whereabuts."

We took a large night glass from under his arm, and sommenced scanning the surface of the waters to the north of the island. Ere long he started, as if he had seen something which filled him with surprise.

"Thunder!" he muttered. "What's that?" "Aloft, these!" cried Gunnels, sharply. The Yankes serted as if shot, nearly dropping his glass.

"I say, up there!" "Je-roosalem! as sure as my name's Jedediah ottom. There he is again. What do you
